Microsoft Azure, March 16

Two of Microsoft's Azure public cloud services went down for more than two hours for customers in the Central U.S., due to what the software giant described as a "network infrastructure issue."

The outages, which began just after 1 p.m. Central time, affected customers of Microsoft's Azure Virtual Machines (Infrastructure-as-a-Service) and Azure Cloud Services (Platform-as-a-Service) offerings, the Redmond, Wash.-based vendor reported on its Azure Status webpage.

Microsoft described the issue as a "partial service interruption" and said the service had been restored to full availability by 3:19 p.m. CT.
