Hopefully your Friday night plans didn't consist of streaming a movie via Netflix, because the service appears to be suffering a widespread outage.

Twitter users have been buzzing about the downtime for the past 30 minutes or so (as of 9:10 ET), and Netflix's entire website is offline, other than a homepage message that says, "The Netflix website is temporarily unavailable due to scheduled maintenance. During the maintenance period, you may be able to instantly watch movies on an intermittent basis."

Friday night seems like an odd time to schedule maintenance for a popular movie streaming website, but that's their story for the moment. We'll update when we know more.

Uber users will soon see a 'grocery' button in ride-hailing, Eats apps

SASHA LEKACH
JULY 07, 2020

Uber started as a ride-hailing app in 2009, but it expanded into restaurant delivery in 2014. Now, it's offering groceries. On Tuesday, Uber added grocery delivery in its app through Chilean startup Cornershop. To begin, users in 19 Latin American and Canadian cities can use the new option to buy groceries from major stores like Walmart, Metro, Lider, Jumbo, and others.
