Gmail users have been seeing rocky performance today, but the delays should be resolved sometime soon. The email service has been dealing with disruptions and even outages for some users over the past several hours, with sluggish load times and delayed receipt of emails coming as a result. Upward of 50 percent of users may have been seeing performance issues at the peak of the email service's disruptions about an hour ago, at 2:05PM ET. Google is saying that service has been restored for some users, however, and it expects to resolve the issue for everyone else within the hour.
