The Yahoo Mail server problems being experienced across the United States today are testing user patience. While it's unclear if UK users of this online email service are also impacted, we have received a number of complaints from Product Reviews readers and they wanted us to highlight the issues.

One email said, "Constant problems with Yahoo Mail servers throughout May, 2015. Today, I decided to move my email to Gmail and while this wasn't something I wanted to do, I was left with no choice following a mentioned by others on the likes or Down today, Yahoo need to focus on improving their service and servers rather than start new ventures".

The problems sent to our inbox were not alone, as outage websites have hundreds of problems being reported this week along with Twitter seeing daily glitches tweeted. One tweet said, "No Yahoo mail all week, getting connection to server failed". Another reports, "I just keep being asked for my password on iPad, but it's correct".

There will always be problems with most services and many of these are expected considering there's millions of users. While we agree that Yahoo Mail isn't down totally, there's certainly problems with certain users that seem above what should be experienced.

If you want to raise awareness of any Yahoo Mail problems today, then leave a comment below. We have reached out to Yahoo on official channels, but haven't received a response at the time of publication. This article will be updated with any official statements in regard to these email and claimed server issues.
